Workshop Outline

A strong brand identity has the potential to position a company ahead of its competition. Building a powerful brand is about resonating with your target audience as well as with everyone in the company. They must become your brand's most fervent ambassadors. It's all about credible communication with a message that hits the target audience immediately.

This one-day workshop will teach you the skills necessary to build your brand, the ins and outs of living your brand, and how to design a basic brand development plan to position your brand effectively. You will learn about key messaging as well as the basics of how public relations and reputation are directly linked to the sustainability of your brand.

Programme outline:

- What is a brand?
- What is reputation and why is this vital to a brand?
- Social media and brand reputation
- Corporate identity and the importance thereof
- Suppliers, the importance of accurate supplier briefs and brand equity
- Brand positioning and association
- Brands and consumer behaviour
- Basics of brand activations
- Basics of brand development planning
- The essentials of building a brand successfully
- Brands and the marketing mix
- Public relations and brand reputation

As a result of participating effectively in this workshop, participants will be able to:

- Understand why building your brand is important and the factors that influence it
- Compile an effective brand development plan
- Understand the value of branding and what elements will make yours the brand of choice
- Understand the principles of a corporate identity

- Understand how the marketing mix forms part of a brand
- Have a deeper insight/understanding about consumers and how they 'roll'
- Understand and outline the PR aspects of building a brand linked to brand reputation
- Understand the importance of supplier relationships, briefings and brand knowledge.
- Provide advice to the business on how social media affects a brand.

Once you have been given the recipe, you too can stimulate your brand and showcase your creativity to effectively stage brand activations and seamlessly integrate all available communication means to a single platform.
