Workshop Outline

In the shift from the traditional print and broadcast media to the digitally infused current media landscape, media writers had to adapt or risk becoming irrelevant. The rules of writing have changed radically and so have its tools and languages. The modern media writer requires new technical writing skills combined with a much more creative spirit to craft texts that attract, entice and entertain readers irrespective of media channel or platform.

Attend this highly entertaining and intensive three day workshop to learn all about writing English texts and preparing imaginative content that people will want to read, remember and respond to. Creative writing is an art that can be learned. When writing for the media you need to create copy that is well planned, purposeful and memorable. You are required to perfect the balancing act between journalism and creative writing to provide the media with compelling news that promotes your organisation and gets its key messages across to all its targeted stakeholders.

The creative writing workshop covers:

- Writing effective media releases for different media and platforms
- Crafting creative feature articles
- Harnessing the characteristic of the different media types optimally to create compelling messages
- The effectiveness of different writing styles
- Writing creative headlines and captions
- Making the transition from print to web writing creatively
